An Introduction to Second Thessalonians

The City of Thessalonica

The city of Thessalonica was a large seaport of the Roman province of Macedonia. It was located on the slope of a hill at the northeast end of the Thermaic Gulf which is now called the Gulf of Salonika. In olden times it had various names such as Emathia and Halia. It also appears in ancient history as Therma because of the hot springs which were found near it.

It was founded in 315 B.C. by Cassander who named it after his wife, the stepsister of Alexander the Great.

When the Roman Empire organized Macedonia into a province in 146 B.C., they made Thessalonica its capital. During the Roman period, it grew to be the second largest city of that area next only to Philippi which was located about 100 miles to the northeast.

The city was designated by the Romans as a “free city.” That meant that it had its own government. It was ruled by officials known as politarchs (Acts 17:6).

Thessalonica had a commercially strategic location. Located at the head of the Thermaic Gulf, it was able to serve as a seaport for the rich agricultural plains of Macedonia. It was also the largest city on the Via Egnatia (The Egnatian Way), the main highway between Rome and the region north of the Aegean Sea. The amount of business it did with peoples from the Orient almost rivaled that done by the cities of Corinth and Ephesus. Because of its commercial importance, a good number of Jews were attracted to live there since there was an active synagogue in the city.

The city still stands today. It is known as “Salonika” and has a population of over 200,000 people.

The Church in Thessalonica

On his second preaching journey he made from the city of Antioch, the apostle Paul traveled by land to Troas. Along the way, he visited the churches he had established on his first journey.

While at Troas, Paul received the “Macedonian call” (Acts 16:9). He, in answer to that call, took Silas, Timothy and Luke and crossed the Aegean Sea to the continent of Europe. He stopped at Philippi where he established a church (Acts 16:10-40). He stayed a very short time in Philippi. When he departed, he left Luke there to teach the church.

Paul then traveled westward along the Via Egnatia, the road which stretched across Macedonia from Philippi to the Adriatic Sea. He made short stops at Amphipolis and Apollonia and then journeyed to Thessalonica.

The Jews in Thessalonica gave Paul the opportunity to speak in the synagogue for three Sabbath days. He “reasoned with them from the Scriptures” showing that Jesus came in fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies and promises (Acts 17:2-3). While some of the Jews believed, there was a greater number of devout Greeks and not a few of the leading women who came to believe (Acts 17:4). The Jews became jealous and gathered some wicked men from the market place and formed a mob. They attacked the house of Jason and took some of the brethren before the city officials and accused them of harboring men who were “acting contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying there is another king—Jesus” (Acts 17:5-8). In response to this attack, Paul and Silas left by night and went to Berea (Acts 17:9-10).

Up to the time Paul wrote this letter, the church at Thessalonica had been very faithful and active. Their “work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ” is pointed out in 1 Thessalonians 1:3. They had set an example for all believers in Macedonia and Achaia, particularly in the fact that from them “the word of the Lord had sounded forth, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place” and that their “faith toward God had gone forth” (1:8).

They had suffered severe persecution from the Jews because the Jews resented their acceptance of Paul’s message and the obvious change in their way of life caused by it. Paul was anxious to know of their state so he sent Timothy from Athens to Thessalonica to get information about them (3:1-5; 2:17). He brought back news that the love the Thessalonians had for Paul continued and that they were standing fast in the faith (2:14; 3:4-6; 4:9-10).

The Author of the Book

The apostle Paul is without doubt the author of this book. He names himself twice (1:1; 3:17) along with Silvanus and Timothy (1:1) as he did in the first epistle (1 Thess. 1:1).

Second Thessalonians is the companion book to First Thessalonians and without this book it would be incomplete.

The Date of the Book

This book, like First Thessalonians, seems to have been sent from the city of Corinth not many months later. Some scholars have suggested that perhaps only a month or two had passed between the writing of these two books. Both books are dated somewhere around 51 to 53 A.D.

Why This Book Was Written

The apostle Paul's main purpose in writing this second book to the Thessalonians seems to be to correct a serious misunderstanding that has arisen among them after they had received his first letter. They thought the second coming of Christ was just at hand. Therefore, many of them had stopped working and apparently were doing nothing but just waiting around for the Lord's return.

The Theme of the Book

The primary theme of 1 Thessalonians is the return of Christ. That same theme was carried over into this book. Each chapter has at least one reference to it (1:7-10; 2:1, 8; 3:5).
