Lesson One:
An Introduction to the Book

I. The Author
There are no serious doubts as to the authorship of the book of Acts of the Apostles. Luke is assigned as its author. As early as the last part of the 2nd century, Irenaeus cites passages so frequently from the Acts of the Apostles that it is certain that he had constant access to the book. He gives emphasis to the internal evidence of its authorship. Tertullian also ascribes the book to Luke, as does Clement of Alexandria. That Luke is the author of the book of Acts is evident from the following.

- The Preface of the Book. The writer addresses Theophilus (Luke 1:3), who is the same individual to whom the gospel of Luke was also directed, and makes reference to a “former treatise” which dealt with “all that Jesus began to do and to teach until the day he was received up” (1:1-2). This is very evidently a reference to the third gospel.
- The book of Acts and the gospel of Luke are identical in style, as a number of scholars have pointed out and demonstrated.
- The book of Acts comes as an historical sequel to the gospel of Luke, taking up with the very events, and at the point where the gospel of Luke concludes, namely the resurrection, the appearances following the resurrection, and the commissioning of the Apostles to the task for which they had been selected and trained by the Lord, and the ascension of Jesus.
- Several portions of the book of Acts are written in the first person plural, called the “we” sections of the book, signifying that the writer was an eye-witness of what he wrote and the companion of Paul (16:10-17; 20:5-15; 21:1-18; 27:1; 28:16).
- Both the gospel of Luke and Acts of the Apostles frequently use medical terminology, which seems sufficient to indicate the profession of Luke, “the beloved physician” (Col. 4:14).

II. When the Book of Acts Was Written
The time of the writing of the Book of Acts seems to coincide reasonably with the close of its historical account. Paul is in prison, still alive in Rome. Evidently, the history recorded in Acts would not have so abruptly ended, if Paul’s death had taken place and it is unlikely that such an event as the destruction of Jerusalem would not have even been mentioned in such an historical account, if it had already occurred. We, therefore, place the date of writing of Acts of the Apostles as prior to 70 A.D. and after Paul reached Rome, probably 63 A.D., or thereabout.

III. To Whom the Book of Acts Was Written
Although the record of Acts is addressed personally to Theophilus, as was the gospel of Luke, it was intended surely for a much wider reading. The origin of Christianity among the Jews, as a prepared people, is prominently noticed in the facts of the beginning (Acts 2). It is also emphasized that the unfailing practice was to preach the gospel first always to the Jews.

However, much of the book is concerned with the history of the transfer of the center of interest in the spread of Christianity from Jerusalem to Antioch, and from the Jewish phase of gospel preaching to the concentrated effort to spread the gospel to the whole Gentile world. This is portrayed as the Lord’s own plan (Acts 1:8, “you shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria and to the uttermost part of the earth”). Luke does not turn away from his purpose in the gospel written by him, namely to present the origin and history of Christianity from the viewpoint of one outside of Judaism.
The book of Acts, therefore, is an historical account adapted to meet the need of the Gentiles as well as the Jews. This reflects Luke’s association with Paul and becomes the basis of what is often thought to be Pauline influence on the record.

IV. The Purpose of the Book of Acts
The common purpose of both the Gospel of Luke and Acts of the Apostles is expressed in Luke 1:4. Additionally, there are a number of specific aims.

1. An Historical Motive. A comparison of Luke 1:1-4 and Acts 1:5, shows a continuation in the historical motive. The subject of the gospel of Luke is “the things that Jesus began to do and teach.” The book of Acts gives the history of the continuation of the work that Jesus had begun as the Holy Spirit carried on His Purpose and that work in the lives of the Apostles. This continuation was outlined in the purpose expressed by the Lord in Acts 1:8, just before His ascension.

2. The Defense Motive. In addressing himself to the Roman world, Luke constantly calls attention to the fact that the gospel enjoyed an interested hearing at the hands of government officials. In every contact with government officials recorded in Acts, Christianity either received a favorable hearing or was ignored, but never opposed. Luke, no doubt, gave emphasis to these favorable attitudes upon the part of the officials for the purpose of contrast in the face of increasing hostility toward Christianity.

3. The Biographical Motive. While Luke’s record is primarily devoted to the revelation of the gospel and its being preached throughout the world, the beginning, growth and spread of the church of the Lord as a consequence, and to the work of the Holy Spirit in the revelation of Divine truth and its confirmation; yet, in a very pronounced way, he divides the historical record of Acts into two different sections biographical in nature by recording in the first section (1 through 12) the history of Peter’s work, and in 13 through 28 a record of the work of the Apostle to the Gentiles, Paul.

Luke’s story is a vivid picture of the use and employment of humanity in the persons of Peter and Paul, Stephen, Philip, Barnabas, Timothy and Titus, in the fulfillment of the purposes which had brought Jesus Christ into the world and of God’s purpose from eternity in the accomplishment of human redemption through the preaching of the gospel.

V. Contents and Character of the Book of Acts
There are five lines of historical reference distinct and continuing that can be definitely traced throughout the Book of Acts. Just as the gospels give us the history of the coming of the Messiah and His life upon the earth, so the book of Acts of the Apostles records for us the history of the beginning, growth and spread of Christianity for at least the first 30 years, from the ascension of Jesus to the imprisonment of Paul.

It has been suggested that the book of Acts furnishes the historical setting for the most of the New Testament epistles, especially those of Paul, and that these epistles can be placed like jewels in the setting of its history. As an analysis of the book and its historical data, we suggest five lines of historical reference:

1. The Apostolic Office and Work. The book derives its name from the work of the Apostles of our Lord and from this record of their work we are able to learn of the Apostolic office in operation and the work that Jesus selected and trained the Apostles to do, as well as the place they fill in the church through the work which they did.

   - They were witnesses for Christ (1:8; 1:21-22).
   - They were ambassadors of the Lord (2 Cor. 5:20; Acts 4:18-20; 5:28-32). They were authorized to speak for Him and to make known His Divine decrees unto all the Nations of the earth. This testimony which they bore is binding both in Heaven and on earth upon all men forever (Matt. 18:18).
They sat upon thrones with authority to rule over the church of our Lord (Matt. 19:28; Acts 2:42; Gal. 2:1-9; 1 John 4:6).

They were “earthen vessels” expendable in the purpose of Christ to reveal the will of God (2 Cor. 4:7).

2. The book could have been called the “Work of the Holy Spirit” in the scheme of redemption.

- The Spirit began His mission which was promised by Christ (John 14:16-17,25-26; 16:7-15; Acts 1:8) on the day of Pentecost (2:33; 2:15-21; 2:1-4).
- The mission of the Holy Spirit as recorded in Acts can be set forth in the following four points:
  1) The revelation of the gospel (2:4; I Cor. 2:10-13; Eph. 3:3-5).
  2) The confirmation of the word revealed by the miracles and signs which followed (Mark 16:15-20; Acts 6:6-8; 8:6-13; 19:6; Heb. 2:1-4).
  3) The conviction and conversion of sinners (John 16:8-11). This was accomplished through the power and influence of Divine truth as the Spirit enabled the Apostles to preach it.
  4) Guide, direct, and edify early Christians through gifts bestowed of an extraordinary nature and through the revelation of the will of God concerning their lives and the accomplishment of His purposes (5:32; 4:31; 9:31; Rom. 8:14).

3. Another line of historical reference prominent in the book is the story of the preaching of the gospel. In this record, the message preached can be identified; and in addition to what they preached, we can learn much of how they preached under different circumstances.

4. An additional line of historical study in the book is that of conversion. Several conversions are related which do not bear testimony concerning human experiences but which passed under the observance of the Holy Spirit twice: 1) When they occurred the preacher was guided by the Holy Spirit; 2) when they were recorded the Holy Spirit recorded them. All of these records of conversions have several things in common.

- The gospel was preached. There is not a single record of anybody being converted by some miraculous experience separate from the power and influence of Divine truth.
- When people were saved by the power of the gospel, it was always because they believed the truth was preached.
- Faith in the gospel which they heard always produced the works of obedience to the will of God which that gospel commanded them to perform.

5. Another prominent theme of historical evidence which can be easily traced all through the book is the story of the church, what it was, of whom it consisted, its organization, its mission and work, its worship and its growth and development. From all this history we can learn what the church was in the beginning under Apostolic guidance, as God designed it and as Christ built it, and therefore, what it must be today.
